OBJECTIVE	The primary objectives in managing pediatric respiratory emergencies are to rapidly assess and stabilize the child, identify the underlying cause, and initiate appropriate interventions to prevent respiratory failure and cardiac arrest. This includes recognizing signs of respiratory distress and failure, understanding the unique anatomical and physiological differences in pediatric airways, and effectively managing airway obstruction and respiratory support
DESCRIPTION	Respiratory emergencies in children encompass a range of conditions affecting the airways and lungs, often leading to breathing difficulties and requiring prompt medical attention. These emergencies can be particularly challenging in children due to their developing respiratory systems, which have decreased respiratory reserve and an increased risk of respiratory failure compared to adults. Common respiratory emergencies in children include croup, bronchiolitis, asthma exacerbations, pneumonia, and foreign body airway obstruction.
